John G. Simon

- Under the auspices of the Law School's China Law Center and at the invitation of Peking University Law School, Professor Simon gave a series of lectures and seminars in Beijing in September followed by similar presentations in Shanghai and Guangzhou, on the American nonprofit sector, discussing the sector's legal status, tax treatment, governance patterns, and social and economic outcomes — and some of the controversies surrounding these topics. In his Beijing presentations, Professor Simon was accompanied by Jamie Horsley, Deputy Director of The China Law Center, and Keith Hand, Beijing Director of the Center. Audiences included law and management students and faculty of four Chinese universities, members of China's first nonprofit organizations legal clinic, and staff members of the Chinese Ministry of Civil Affairs (MOCA) charged with regulating nongovernmental organizations. Two of the MOCA officials, including the Director-General of the Department of Law and Regulation, paid a return visit to New Haven in mid-October to discuss the manner in which American law treats certain issues that have arisen during consideration of a pending Chinese Charity Law. Other participants included Jeffrey Prescott, Deputy Director of the China Law Center, Professor Michael Graetz, two members of the Brigham Young University law faculty, and a leading nonprofit law practitioner from California, as well as Ms. Horsley and Professor Simon. The American participants are presently corresponding with the MOCA representatives to follow up on the New Haven conference.
